

October 2016 Tasting Notes

Aultmore of the Foggy Moss Speyside Single Malt 12YO – 46% ABV – $47.39 plus tax

The colour is a pale golden yellow and the nose is light, delicate and sweet. The first aromas are of honey and vanilla, and these are followed by softer notes of malted barley and freshly cut grass. There is also a slightly hot spirity note and a hint of lemon zest. These both add to the feeling of freshness.

On the palate, the initial notes are very sweet and a bit spirity. The whisky has a delicate and light feel but is intensely sugary and sweet. The best description that we could think of was icing sugar mixed with honey. As it settles in the mouth further notes are allowed through and these include plenty of vanilla, plus some malted cereals and a distinct grassy element. This seems to be more like dried grass than on the nose. A twist of lemon is also present. The alcohol spirit is always in the background and adds a spicy heat.

The finish is short and a little sharp. The sugary sweetness fades rapidly to leave the drying grassy and zesty sharp lemon notes to fight it out. It is mouth watering and fresh, and the spirity heat adds to this.
