

Glen Moray
15YO. 40% ABV. $49.99

X Singleton

Nose: quite neutral but very juicy, with less sherry than in the Sherry Cask Finish. Golden raisins, honey and boiled sweets. Hints of strawberry and candied oranges. Some vanilla custard as well. Pretty much a classic Speyside profile. Mouth: sweet peaches at first, then butter toffee and growing spices (mallow pepper, candied ginger). Subtle tobacco and dark chocolate dryness. A more mature profile with more oak influence as well. Finish: medium long, quite rich, with more spices.

Whereas the two previous expressions focused on one set of flavours, this 15 Year Old finds a nice balance between different elements, including a more prominent oaky side. Could have been even better with a slightly higher ABV

Nose: much nicer than expected. There's an uncommon mix of lipstick wax, orange blossom and a dark beer-like malty sweetness. Works surprisingly well. Apple pie and toffee, oranges and honey. Also a certain dustiness. Maybe soft tobacco. I quite like this. Mouth: fairly soft, too bad, with a generic sweetness. Bummer. The profile is still rather nice though. Sweet nuts, pears and a balanced oaky spiciness. Honey. Finish: long, sweet and malty, with lots of mocha and honey.

I have to say the nose of this Singleton of Dufftown 15yo was a nice surprise. Nice character, interesting aromas. A really nice entry-level malt. If only it were bottled with a little bit more power.
