

Meeting Date 1/22/2022

Glendronach Revival 15 YO
46% ABV. $89.99. Highland Malt.
Matured in Pedro Ximenez and Oloroso Sherry Casks

Color: Dark Copper

Nose: Earthy, fruity with deep rich sherry tones

Taste: Dusty red grape skin, dark chocolate, the earthiness of nose is more coffee grind on the tongue than anything else (and I mean this in a good way). This is full of sherry goodness and is more than its reputation as a sherry bomb. There is salt and even hints of smoke in this release. The mouthfeel is round, full, and slightly dry from having spent a full 15 yrs in a Spanish Oloroso Sherry Cask. Water takes out some of the sweetness, brings on the dryness of the sherry quicker, and makes the hints of smoke a bit more prominent.

Finish: It quickly goes from an earthy, nutty yet silky chocolate mouthful to a long, moderately dry peppery spiciness.

More experienced friends of mine claim that GlenDronach releases are what old versions of Macallan used to taste like. I can't speak to that but I will say this is a great dram to have on your shelf. As I say above, it's more than just a "sherry bomb". It is complex, meaty and alternates between smoky, spicy and fruity.

Glenfarclas 105 Cask Strength
60% ABV. NAS (10 years) $89.99 + tax
Distilled on Speyside for six generations by one family.

Relatively closed on its own, slight sherry fruitiness on the nose but still very reserved. In the mouth a bit fuller and more varied between sweet, sour and spicy impressions. The alcohol is very well integrated and not too strong. A lot of chocolate in the finish, through which the fruitiness of the nose slowly fights its way forward.
Length: 4/10

With water it becomes creamier and releases caramel, but in return it loses some of its fruitiness. In the mouth it becomes a bit rounder (and more boring), the finish gains in spice. I think I like it a little better without water.

Overall nice sherry cask strength for the tight budget.

Glenfarclas 105 Cask Strength
60% ABV. NAS (10 years) $89.99 + tax
Distilled on Speyside for six generations by one family.

Relatively closed on its own, slight sherry fruitiness on the nose but still very reserved. In the mouth a bit fuller and more varied between sweet, sour and spicy impressions. The alcohol is very well integrated and not too strong. A lot of chocolate in the finish, through which the fruitiness of the nose slowly fights its way forward.

Length: 4/10

With water it becomes creamier and releases caramel, but in return it loses some of its fruitiness. In the mouth it becomes a bit rounder (and more boring), the finish gains in spice. I think I like it a little better without water.

Overall nice sherry cask strength for the tight budget.

Glendronach Revival 15 YO
46% ABV. $89.99. Highland Malt.
Matured in Pedro Ximenez and Oloroso Sherry Casks

Color: Dark Copper

Nose: Earthy, fruity with deep rich sherry tones

Taste: Dusty red grape skin, dark chocolate, the earthiness of nose is more coffee grind on the tongue than anything else (and I mean this in a good way). This is full of sherry goodness and is more than its reputation as a sherry bomb. There is salt and even hints of smoke in this release. The mouthfeel is round, full, and slightly dry from having spent a full 15 yrs in a Spanish Oloroso Sherry Cask. Water takes out some of the sweetness, brings on the dryness of the sherry quicker, and makes the hints of smoke a bit more prominent.

Finish: It quickly goes from an earthy, nutty yet silky chocolate mouthful to a long, moderately dry peppery spiciness.

More experienced friends of mine claim that GlenDronach releases are what old versions of Macallan used to taste like. I can't speak to that but I will say this is a great dram to have on your shelf. As I say above, it's more than just a "sherry bomb". It is complex, meaty and alternates between smoky, spicy and fruity.
